The Associated Press

PTRAEUS, Greece — The Greek government made public pictures of three men on Tuesday who were said to have been involved in a iefrorist attack aboard a Greek cruise ship that left 11 people dead and 98 wounded.

Greek anthorities speculated that the attack on Monday was part of a failed attempt by pro-Iranian Aimb terrorists to hijack the Greekowned ship, the City of Poros, carrying foreign tourists on an islandhopping cruise.

There was speculation that the attack was linked to a trial due to art in Greece on Wednesday of a Palestinian wanted in the United Sistes in connection with the bombing a Pan Am jetliner in 1982.

Government officials said a woman was also involved in the attack on Monday and was photographed on the ship. Her photo-graph was not made public, but was being distributed to airports, border entry points and harbors around Greece, according to the officials.

The black and white pictures, taken by the ship's photographer, showed three men — one bearded, one mustachioed and one cleanshaven. Authorities said three men hurled grenades and fired automatic weapons at passengers aboard the 588-too City of Poros. The poissa. Symphony Onter line said the assailants fled in a

U.S. Craft Fire At 2 Iran Boats

WASHINGTON (Reuters)

Two U.S. military helicopters exchanged fire with two small boats believed to be Iranian craft near Iran's Farsi Island in the northern Gulf on Tuesday, the Pentagon said.

The Defense Department said the helicopters were fired on about 15 miles (about 24 kilometers) west of the island and returned the fire with rockets. It was not known if the boats were damaged. The helicopters were investigating a distress call from a Panama-

By Judith Miller

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - Governor Michael S. (AP. Reuters) strong measure," Father D'Escoto Dukakis's selection of Senator Lloyd Bentsen of Texas is not an exercise in political strangebedfellowship. In 1960, a liberal Democrat from Massachusens reached out to a moderate politician from Texas as his running mate. In the most narrow of election victories, John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson beat Riehard Nixon and Henry Cabot Lodge. Political wisdom has it that having Mr. Johnson on the ticket delivered Texas and, therefore, the election to the Demo-

In selecting Mr. Bentsen for the No. 2 slot on his ticket, Mr. Dukakis is attempting to replay that much-celebrated strategy. He hopes to forge a similar coalition of Northeastern liberals and Southern moderates and conservatives.

Mr. Dukakis believes, as did Mr. Kennedy, that to win in November, the Democrats must carry not only New York, California, Illinois and Pennsylvania — where he is running strong -but also Texas, Vice President George Bush's

The selection of Mr. Bentsen reflects more not truly conservative, is far more moderate than the imperatives of modern electoral colthan the imperatives of modern electoral college strategy. It also reveals the substantive and symbolic tactics of the campaign that Mr. Dukakis intends to wage.

Republicans say the choice of Mr. Bentsen was one of elimination. Senator John Glenn of Ohio was too dull; Senator Albert Gore Jr. of Fennessee was too young and had offended the campaign of the Reverend Jesse L. Jackson. But some Democrats portray the choice as logical, even inevitable. As noted by Bill Schneider, a senior political analyst at the American Enterprise Institute, each time Democrats nominated two liberals - 1968, 1972 and 1984 - those tickets were defeated.

By choosing the moderately conscrvative Mr. Bentsen and an Eastern-Southern strategy, the Democrats have decided to color their ticket "centrist." Mr. Dukakis bopes to balance his own ostensible liberalism and Northern base with a Southernish politician whose record, if

Mr. Bentsen clashes in both ideology and style with the Massachusetts governor. True, they both share a keen interest in economic and tax policy, and both have a reputation for being "dealers." But many perceive Mr. Bentsen as the consummate old-guard Southern politician. a "back room" wheeler-dealer. Mr. Dukakis, by contrast, is seen as a new Democratic politician - something of a pragmatist and dealer - but definitely the "front room" variety.

In addition to bringing the ticket ideological and geographic balance, Mr. Bentsen's long service in the Senate enables him to boast of expertise in foreign policy and defense, which Mr. Dukakis lacks.

As a symbol, the choice represents a gesture to the Southern, traditional wing of the party. which has been feeling ignored and somewhat miffed by Mr. Dukakis's primary triumph. So much energy has gone into the care and feeding of the Jackson wing of the party that only lately did Democratie analysts begin to notice that

Bonn Bars Curbs On NATO Flying

The Associated Press BONN - Defense Minister Rupert Scholz of West Germany ruled out Tuesday a ban on low-level NATO training flights, despite growing calls that they should be drastically reduced or eliminated,

"Low-level flights are necessary to maintain military security and readiness," Mr. Scholz was quoted in the magazine Quick as saying. Calls for reductions or elimination of such flights have increased following a series of military-related air crashes in West Germany in recent months. Last week, the parhament of the state of Rhineland-Palatinate approved a nonbinding resolution calling for an end to low-

A Varian spokesman said the suspension of Continental Electronics "is a bit shocking to us on such limited information and with no indictments."

The navy also said it has begun action to suspend without pay George Stone, a procurement official with the Space and Naval Warfare Systems Command. The suspensions were described as interim.

The Pentagon also said that new contracts or contract renewals in four programs would require further review by the undersecretary of the navy.

On July 1, Mr. Carlucci froze payments of about $1 billion in military contracts, in response to court documents and wiretap evidence released in Dallas in connection with the Justice Department probe of alleged military procurement corruption. # )pel technology in pole position.

Staying ahead in the automotive field today means exploring the outer limits of modern technology.

That's a policy Opel, together with its parent company General Motors, is pursuing to the full. GM's acquisition of high-tech companies like Hughes Aircraft and Electronic Data Systems reflects this determination to maintain technological leadership. And now, with the entry of Lotus into the GM fold, Opel is moving into the ultimate testing ground: formula motor racing.

The Opel-Lotus Challenge is a unique new European formula racing championship that recently made its debut on top circuits. The Formula Opel-Lotus racing car is powered by the same 2-litre, 16 valve engine that makes Opel Kadett GSi 16V the top performer in its class. Fitted with twin Weber carburettors for the racetrack, it catapults the Lotus-validated chassis up to 100 km/h in four and a half breathtaking seconds.

The concept of the Opel-Lotus Challenge is simple. A European championship in which there is only one variable: driver skill. And one important constant: Opel's commitment to state-of-the-art technology.

edged that this country's days of virtual one-party rule are over.

So far, this momentous change toward greater political pluralism and genuine competitiveness appears to be taking place in a nonviolent climate. According to a cabi-net minister, Mr. Salinas wants the government to be especially careful se days to avoid provoking a violent turn in the various protests taking place around the country.

Mr. Salinas shows signs of starting to make good on his pledges to change Mexico and the very political machine charged with sweeping him to power, although not enough to suit many opponents upset about the lopsided returns in favor of the PRI that are filtering in from the countryside.

Mr. Salinas, 40, a technocrat, has already introduced a sort of Mexican-style glasnost by admitting big losses in state-level presidential voting and congressional races. Yet, given popular mistrust of the government, he appears to face an hill battle at the start to convince Mexicans that he did not actually lose the nationwide popular vote, Mexican analysts say.

Moreover, they say, his eventual administration is likely to feel pressure to adopt more progressive policies to placate a resurgent left, led by Cuauhtémoc Cárdenas, who is running second in the semiofficial vote tallies made public so far. The other leading opposition candidate in the presidential election, Manuel Clouthier, a conservative, conceded Monday that he had been de-

The PRI administration of President Miguel de la Madrid, who inherited a nearly bankrupt, heavily indehted economy, has presided over six years of economic austerity and near-zero growth, burdensome debt-service payments and runaway inflation that reached 159 percent last year.

The de la Madrid administration and its state governments have also angered many Mexicans by engaging in lavisb campaign spending and, in previous regional elections, blatant vote fraud. One perhaps inadvertent implication of the electioo results oow being issued is that the vote total for Mr. de la Madrid in his 1982 presidential victory was grossly inflated.

Although the turnout on July 6 heavier than oo election day in 1982, far fewer votes are being recorded than six years ago.

TAIPEI - Taiwan opened the door to China wider Tuesday when its ruling party adopted new guidelines allowing Taiwanese business-men to make indirect investments in China and permitting some Chinese citizens to visit Taiwan for the

In the last several months, Taiwan has gradually eased its tough restrictions on contact with China, allowing people to visit their close relatives on the mainland, send mail, read some books published there, and watch some movies filmed in China. Yet Taiwanese have been clamoring for more, and have been closely following the governing Nationalist Party's de-liberations on mainland China policy during its first national convention in seven years.

deliberately vague, so that the ex-tent of the changes in policy de-pends on how liberally officials will interpret the new guidelines. Nor did they satisfy several party liberals, who pushed for more sweeping changes. In drawing them up, the party had to balance its official line of oo contact with China against the reality that such contacts are rapidly increasing.

Nonetheless, the guidelines con-siderably expanded the informal economic and social ties now allowed with a country long considered Taiwan's deadliest enemy.

Taiwan would now permit - un-der unspecified conditions and after government screening - visits back and forth to Taiwan and China of both Taiwan and Chinese journalists, intellectuals, students, artists, entertainers, and cultural figures. Until now, Taiwan has banned visits from citizens of China. Taiwan journalists, who have been eager to report about China, have been able to do so officially only if they can produce relatives in China. Several have filed dispatchwas acknowledged to have been es while visiting relatives, and one magazine this month printed a spe-

ARLES, France — For eight years Wu Yin-xian was the sole photographic chronicler for the Chinese Red Army in its stronghold in Yanan. His stills and movies of making destitute persants into victorious soldiers were used to convince millions to join the revolution.

As the bead of "cinema group of Yanan" from 1938 to 1946, and its only professional, Wu recorded the birth of modern China, taking pictures of all the Communist Party leaders whn followed Mao Zedong into the mountains on the Long March of 1934-35.

"I knew we were living a historical moment, but I did not realize until after the liberation war that my work would become the only historical document of that period. At the time I was fighting Japanese invaders with my camera, I was just another soldier.

The first time I met Mao in 1938 was at the front. I was filming and photographing soldiers. It was only two years later that I took my first pictures of Mao. There were official and unoffi-cial pictures of him. # 'Bambi' Turns 46 and Disney Goes Dizzy

By Aljean Harmetz

New York Times Service T OS ANGELES - The trendiest party in L Hollywood this summer served strawberry pancakes and coloring books instead of champagne and gossip.

The movie industry's recent haby boom was unmistakable last Sunday at Walt Disuey Studios as more than 100 of Hullywood's tallest trees - producers, directors, writers, agents, and a sprinkling of actors - were lost in the Inrest of their children, most of them under 6 years old. The occasion was Disney's planned reissue of its 1942 animated film "Bambi," to begin on Friday; the reason was more subtle.

Most studio parties and premieres have the double purpose of focusing a spotlight on a movie and flattering an important producer, director or star.

Twentieth Century-Fox's lavish and spectacular party for "Big" a month ago — a party that cost nearly $200,000 — was intended to show that Fox finally had a movie worth trumpeting. and to coddle the studin's star director. James L. Brooks, who had produced "Big."

In contrast, Disney's "Bambi" party had lit-tle to do with the picture and anthing in do with the men who made it 46 years ago. The purpose nf the $50,000 party was to create good will,

"People don't make their deals based on where they can take their kids, but social relatinnships can lead to business relationships," said Gary Kalkin, the vice president of market-ing for Disney. 1986. Disney has accompanied each of its new and reissued animated films with a party whose basic appeal is to people less than 48 inches tall.

"And we're not working," said Jeffrey Kat-zenberg, the chairman of Walt Disney Studios, as he watched his 5-year-old daughter color yellow spots on Thumper's gray hind foot.
"We're all running around taking care of our children, who are not interested in talking about somebody's next deal."

In fact, almost unbody even mentioned the writers' strike. They were too busy trying to get Mickey Mouse to pay attention to their chil-

"We do like Goofy and Donald and Jeffrey Katzenberg, but Mickey's the cheese," the actor Danny De Vito said. Mickey and Minnie strolled down a studio street. Chip and Dale hugged every child. Goofy sat at the coloring table with 4-year-old girls. And Thumper, the uninhibited rabbit from "Bambi," posed for Polaroid snapshots with the children.

"Bambi," the movie, was something of an anticlimax, with a constant stream of toddlers and their mothers going to and from the bath-rooms during the film.

As the party ended, Larry Mark, a 20th Century-First producer, watched the children hugging 12-inch-tall stuffed Thumpers as they walked to the parking lat. "What Disney puts on is a Narman Rockwell version of a Hollywood party," he said.

bad, people went home whistling the scenery? That might almost be laff rior, but it is a golden opportu-

that we were among throngs of the most marvelous, intricate struc-nity - fully exploited - for virtuoso visual effects, particularly some striking projections. Besides blizzards and vast snowscapes, these include objects whizzing through space, stampedes of the planet's aurochs-like fauna, and the building of a massive wall in a futile effort to hold back the encroaching ice. A major gee-whiz moment is the landing of a giant bumanoid, robot-shaped space vehicle amid a cascade of stroboscopic flashes.

Lessing's novel on which the op-era is based is a short book that manages to feel like a long one. She had to lighten and simplify the text considerably for her libretto, and she did that fairly well at first. But as the story progresses, the ice that grips the planet also clamps down on her style; the text becomes wordy and prosy; the buman interest drains away into quasi-philosophical concepts, and the people

The music is not much help, tonality in its ability to convey strong personal emotion-particu-

The music offers only minimal opportunities for singers, but the performance (well conducted by John DeMain) was generally acceptably sung, though the chorus often seemed to have marbles in its mouth. Jason Alexander and Louise Edeiken, given some lyric opportunities, used them well. Har-lan Foss and Timothy Breese, with more workmanlike assignments,

After its seven performances here, "Planet 8" will be produced primitive paradise, populated by noble savages who have kept their

Stone Age charm although techno-missionaries from Canopus have recently introduced them to sci-

the heroine Alsi complains to Johor, the Canopus agent. "They did not know of fire or cooking flesh.

They believe that we are worse by far than they." She is particularly upset by what she has seen in the microscope: "Our flesh is nothing... We are empty spaces where the cosmic wind whistles through a frame of starry nothing."

But that is not their worst prob-

Brian Cox: Wrecked Majesty Reigns in 'Titus Andronicus'

By Sheridan Morley

International Herold Tribuni

LONDON — Writing from Stratford a year ago, I said that Deborah Warner's RSC revival there of "Titus Andronicus" was the best thing to have happened by the Avoo for a long time. There is no need to alter that verdict as the production moves into the Barbican Pit for the London sum-

Out of a melodrama steeped in blood and butchery and near-laughable cannibalism, she has carved a tragedy of terrible power, and in the other

THE LONDON STAGE

role Brian Cox gives a performance of wrecked majesty that has to qualify him for the next great Lear while being recognized as the major dramatic achievement of the classical season.

Seldom revived since the classic Olivier produc tion by Peter Brook in 1956, this bloodbath of retribution and revenge looks even more chilling in the subterranean studio close-up of the Pit than it appeared on the broader stage of the Swan.

Though it runs close to four stifling hours, there is seldom a moment when the production loses energy or pace as it races to the final appalling human banquet. Warner has stripped the scene of its dangerous bilarity by having Andronicus's at-tendants whistle white they go about their work.

Estelle Kohler plays Tamora as the original dragon-empress, Donald Sumpter is moving as the brother trying to bring some kind of sanity amid the carnage, and Sonia Ritter is beartbreaking as the handless, tongueless, ravished Lavinia.

It is true that Peter Polycarpou's Aaroo lacks the moorish majesty of Anthony Quayle in that role 30 years ago, but in every other respect this is a production to bring some much-oeeded confi-dence and distinction back to the currently troubled heart of the Royal Shakespeare Company.

Once in a while, a show opens in the West End of such breathtaking awfulness and inadequacy that you begin to have serious doubts about London's claim to be the theater capital of the known world.

One such is "Exchisive Yarus" by Gary Lyons and Stewart Permutt, oow to be found, though oot, I would guess, for long, at the Comedy Theatre.

This seems to have started life as a 20-minute revue sketch at a lunchtime fringe address, and must even there and then have seemed desperately overlong. Padded up to two hours, it resembles at best a nonmusical version of "La Cage aux Folles" rewritten by a couple of funeral directors on a bad

Regardless of the fact that Victoria Wood and others on television have already done every possible joke about the lunacies of soap operas, "Exclusive Yarns" relentlessly tries to parody one and then examine the lives of a group of men in drag gathering to act out its highlights. Some old vaudeville jokes are dragged with increasing desperation out of a closet where they should, like the characters, have been left to die of their own senility.

For Lack of a Policy

Twice in the last week, friendly Arab governments in the Gulf region took steps to buy arms elsewhere after members of the U.S. Congress, acting, they believed, for the good of Israel, had rebuffed their efforts to buy American weapons, Saudi Arabia announced an agreement in the $10-to-$20-billion and up range to acquire British aircraft and other items and to have the British build military facilities. And Kuwait, seeing Congress strip missiles from an aircraft-plus-missiles package, announced a deal with Moscow for unspecified "military equipment."

Israel has reason to fear the accumulation of arms by governments formally in a state of war with it. Although these arms may be acquired in the context of Gulf tensions, they become available for use in an Arab-Israeli context. Gulf states which sat out past Arab-Israeli wars diminish that option as they acquire capabilities which constitute, to Israel, a threat it must plan for down the road. Their affluence and their peril, however, virtually ensure that Gulf states will buy foreign arms. The question is where. They often prefer to buy American since with the hardware comes a valuable measure of political closeness and protection. There also comes at least an opportunity for the United States to shape the package or somehow to moderate the recipients' policy toward Israel. This opportunity is lost when the Gulf states turn to Britain or other European suppliers, which are driven almost en-tirely by commercial considerations and are not in a position to attach political strings.

Israelis, finally if not enthusiastically, understand the possible advantages in having Washington take a lead in arms sales to Arabs. This is why, for instance, Jerusalem did not weigh in against the latest American deal with Kuwait, a country literally under Iranian guns. The pro-Israel lobby in Washington fought the deal, however. Its success can only push Kuwait to follow the example of a similarly rebuffed Saudi Arabia and to seek a replacement supplier which will not attach effective limiting conditions. The re-sult is to undercut Israeli security and American influence in the Gulf - a double loss.

Arms sales alone are inadequate as policy.

The essential requirement is an active, well designed diplomatic strategy. The Reagan administration got in this game late and has fared poorly. The next administration will have to make its own opening. Meanwhile, things should not be made worse by careless promotion of unreasonable arms deals or careless blocking of reasonable ones.

A Crisis for Mexico

Mexico's election returns have been coming in disastrously slowly, and the delays cast a cloud of suspicion over them. The effect is inevitably to weaken the authority of the next president. His supporters are going to have to find a way to establish his legitimacy and rescue him from the accusations of fraud. The Partido Revolucionario Institucional ran the country with ruthless assurance for nearly 60 years, resorting to manipulation of the returns whenever necessary to maintain its grip. In the past several years it has deliberately loosened that grip but, with serious opposition candidates now running against it, it has not been able to provide convincing assurance of the integrity of last Wednesday's returns,

Mexico is engaged in a great effort to open up, simultaneously, both its economy and its political processes to greater compotition. Bot not everyone wants to depart from the security of a well established tradition. The delays in counting the votes reflect bitter quarrels within the ruling hierarchy over the country's future.

For six decades Mexico has been run by a very effective machine which, like most machines, feeds on a heavy diet of patronage, Many Mexicans have come to see this system as a burden on the country and an impediment to its development. That opinion is widespread among a class of educated and sophisticated technocrats that has grown rapidly in the past generation and is repre-sented by Carlos Salinas de Gortari, the PRI candidate. But these new ideas about efficiency and productivity are deeply threatening mu only to some politicians but to businessmen and working people used to the old rules of protection and payoff.

Mexico's foreign debts have become a ominent issue, and the candidate of the left. Cuauhtemoc Cárdenas, has talked of drastic reductions in payments on them. That sounds a little like the Peruvian formula, which bought a year or two of cuphoria at the price of the chaos that followed when the country ran out of credit. Mexico's economy is far stronger than Peru's, but the choice is essentially the same. Economic isolationism is not the route to rapid internal development and rising standards of living.

But the debts are really secondary. The main interest of Mexicans, as of their neighbors, is in a stable and competent government in Mexico City that enjoys the respect of the people it governs. To extract that from the present election fiasco is going to take extraordinary political skill and stamina.

Yes to Some Testing

Does the U.S. government have the right ment makes a plausible case when it com-"to seize at random the bodily fluids of hundreds of thousands of its employees and search those fluids by urinalysis for evidence of drug abuse"? That is what the American Civil Liberties Union and other critics of the Reagan administration's random drug testing program are asking. In due course, they The right answer is yes: If limited to cases of demonstrated need, such testing can be conducted with decent regard for privacy.

President Reagan is entitled to some latitude to fight the drug war on his own turf. Government has made the sale and use of certain substances illegal. Government need not hire drug users or keep them on the public payroll. But it is crucial that government use its power sensibly and sensitively. Law and public perceptions have come a long way since the fire department in Plain-field, New Jersey, raided its own fire station two years ago, roused sleeping firefighters and demanded urine samples. The Reagan program addresses the need for fair warning to employees and job applicants, dignified yet reliable collection of samples, safeguards against false results and considerate behavior toward users willing to accept help. The Civil Liberties Union argues that urine testing is a search. That is correct, but the next question is whether such a search is reasonable under the Fourth Amendment without a warrant based on reasonable suspicion of criminal conduct. The governpares drug testing to administrative health and building inspections, for which the Supreme Court has not demanded probable cause that there is evidence of crime.

The random drug testing program also asserts plausible government interests. In one case before the Supreme Court, a Customs Service regi any employee seeking a transfer to a position. involving interdiction of narcotics, carrying firearms or handling classified material. In the other case, the Transportation Department mandates testing of railroad employees who are involved in train accidents.

It seems absurd, at least for personnel who enforce the law or have beavy responsibility for public safety, to insist that authorities must harbor strong suspicions before testing. Random testing does not cast a net of suspicion over all employees in sensitive positions.

Despite court challenges, including a lawsuit filed by 42 Justice Department employees, the basic programs on their face are not excessively sweeping. The Justice plan, which conocivably can cover anyone connected with law enforcement, is prudently limited to employees with grand jury respon-sibility or access to classified information.

If the court gives broad approval to the Reagan testing programs, the need will re-main to administer them compassionately. But to tolerate drug abuse among pivotal public servants is to abuse the public.

Another U.S. Shift in Asia?

The kind of strategic setting Indonesia would like to see emerge in its region may not be congruent with U.S. nadonal interests. The major question Jakarta would like to see answered, especially from high-ranking U.S. officials like Secretary of State George Shultz, is how the United States envisions its role in this region in the next 10 to 15 years. After all, in one generation we have experienced a shift in U.S. positions from a confrontational stance against "Red China" in the 1950s, to the need to prevent communism from steamrolling into South-east Asia and knocking down the "dominoes" in the 1960s, to the realization that fighting Asians on their home ground would mean an "unwinnable" war. So the United States made its decision in the 1970s to withdraw from the Southeast Asian mainland and gradually develop a strategic cooperative relationship with China. We now [have] clear indications that we are again on the eve of shifts that may affect the balance of power in East Asia. - The Jakarta Post.

Breaking Eggs in Mexico

Whatever the final "official" results of the election in Mexico, the old one-party system is dead. Poliocal pluralism has arrived. The Institutional Revolutionary Party may be able to hold the presidency for another six years against extraordinary challenges from a united left and a reinvigorated right. But its tenure will be contested steadily, forcing the PRi to govern not by fiat but by the arts of political democracy. In make omelets, you have to break eggs, says the old revolutionary recipe. If Mexico is to become a modern democracy, it will have to break the PRI monopoly on power. The United States should welcome this ferment. A modern democracy south of the Rio Grande would be troublesome but much in U.S. interests. - The Baltimore Sun.

OPINION

It's Uphill for Dukakis, but Bush Is Beatable Papandreou

WASHINGTON — Political opinion soundings have been taking some strange bounces in recent months. In the Gallup Poll, Vice President George Bush went from a 12-point lead in voter intension a 12-point lead in voter intension. tions in March to trailing Michael Dukakis by 16 points in May and by 14 points in early June. But the gap narrowed to only 5 points as July began. Other polls have shown much the same pattern.

Same commentators say these polls are useless because they cannot predict what will happen in the No-vember election, which is true. But the polls have had a major impact on the campaign by creating a dramatic change in the political climate.

Mr. Bush, once picked by many as the odds-on favorite, is oow revealed as someone with extremely high oegarive ratings. He may be in a stronger position today than he was a month ago; but we have learned, through the polis, that he can be defeated.

Mr. Dukakis, on the other hand, emerges as a formidable candidate and not simply the last survivor among a group of dwarfs. That view is widely held today, but not long ago it was rare. Those "useless" polls made all the difference

There have been any onmber of explanations offered for the teetertottering in the polls. Mr. Dukakis's repeated primary victories over Jesse Jackson gave him the aura of being a winner at a time when Mr. Bush had clinched the Republican nomination and was out of the limelight. Mr. Bush also was hurt by unanswered questions about his role in the Iran-contra scandal, his reputed knowledge of drug struggling by the Panamanian strongman, General Manuel Antonio Noriega, and the United States's inability to prevent drugs from crossing its borders, a fight nominally under Mr. Bush's command. These factors no doubt were at By Barry Sussman work as Mr. Dukakis climbed in the polls. But another element, I think, was at least as important and will become paramount as the campaign that in 1984, talking about "a trap progresses. It is the status, or the perceived status, of the economy.

When Mr. Dukakis's lead was at its biggest, in May and early June, opinion polls showed widespread national pessimism over the economy. A Washington Post-ABC News poll found that for every respondent who said the economy was getting better there were two who said it was getting worse. That was a recession-level perception and was bad news for Mr. Bush, at least in the short run.

The recent polls showing a righter race reveal no major gains for Mr. Bush. Instead there has been a substantial switch from Mr. Dukakis to the "undecided" column.

It is not clear that second thoughts about Mr. Dukakis are linked to changing perceptions of the economy. This may simply reflect voters drawing back to take a second look, prompted perhaps by harsh criticism of the governor by Mr. Bush. But Mr. Dukakis's poll decline occurred just as the dollar strengthened and oil prices dropped. It seems likely that voters will soon be taking a brighter view of the economy. This will make it difficult for him to rebuild a substantial lead.

Mr. Bush's main job between now and the election will be to persuade people that the economy is doing well. He will point to high levels of employment and low inflation rates; and he will try to persuade voters that they will be better off financially if he is elected (which is what his pledge not to raise taxes is about).

Mr. Dukakis's task is more unpleasant. He must focus on the un-derbelly of the employment statistics door" under the economy, and he struck nut. The Massachusetts governor will have to do better. Barring a war or a real threat of one, the election will turn on perceptions of the economy, just as Mr. Reagan's 1984 landslide did.

Political activists - those who care about such things as the environment, race relations, health care, edu-abortion and the fight against drugs and crime — must be tired of hearing how important perceptions of the economy are in presidential cam-paigns. But that's the way it is.

All other issues of importance to Americans can be expected to fade. It is just about impossible to exaggerate the importance of the economy when it comes to choosing a president.

Mr. Sussman, formerly director of polling for The Washington Post, is author of "What Americans Really Think and Why Our Politicians Pay No Attention." He contributed this comment to The Washington Post.

The Languid World Bank Needs a Shaking Up

N EW YORK — Even its traditional sup-porters recognize that the World Bank is slipping into obsolescence.

While Third World debt chokes off growth in the developing countries, the bank is proceeding with business as usual, underwriting infrastructure projects in the Third World. If it is to remain a true engine of development, it must direct its efforts to debt relief. The U.S. Congress, which will soon vote on the bank's request for a capital increase, should insist on such a change.

As things now stand, this once mighty and enlightened institution risks becoming irrelevant to the developing countries it has always served, and America is the worse for it. For 40 years the bank lent tens of billions to finance public works like dams, roads and bridges. Those countries modernized and grew into a huge export market for U.S. products. The United States ran a trade surplus with Latin America as recently as 1981.

Now the developing world is suffering a prolonged economic slump and its financing oceds are different. Its debt-ridden national governments are oearly insolvent, as interest payments consume their export earnings. As a result they have oo capital for critical imports like machinlion in exports in the last six years.

The World Bank's drift cannot be permitted to continue. There are at least four initiatives By Roger Altman

· The bank must sharply increase lending to weakened national governments. No other source of capital exists today because private lenders have pulled out and the IMF traditionally has a shorterterm horizon. The flow of private capital to the developing countries in 1987 failed to match the outflow of debt repayments. This unfortunate trend will not be reversed soon. But despite $120 billion of total capital, the World Bank made only $3.5 billion of such government loans last year. This level should be at least tripled.

• The bank should manage its assets more creatively to finance these increased commitments. All well managed lenders sell packages of loans, using the proceeds for further lending. But the World Bank, despite holding billions of such marketable loans, sold less than $500 million in 1987. It might be argued that it must be extremely conservative to preserve its triple-A credit ratings. This misses the point. The bank's credit reflects the capital commitments of its sharebolders more than the mix of its balance sheet.

 The bank should insist that the surplus ery, and no growth. This has cost the American countries, particularly Japan and West Germaincrease. After huge, global shifts of ecocomic and financial power during the 1980s, the bank's current capital expansion plan is an anachronism. It would commit the United this comment to The New York Times.

States to furnish its historical 20 percent share of the total capital, with these two countries cootributing just under 6 percent.

This is unsound and unfair. Other countries have become rich by exporting to the United States and by transferring to it the financial responsibility for their national defense. As the United States struggles to core its budget and trade deficits, they can shoulder more of the burden. There is oo more enlightened way to recycle their surpluses than through increased commitments to the World Bank.

. In a time that cries out for a new solution to the developing world's economic crisis, the World Bank should not be dozing on the sidelines. For the past three years it has timidly supported the Reagan administration's muddlethrough strategy. But with ominous signs of another debt storm gathering, even the bank's annual report decries the futility of this approach. A plan for truly stretching out Third World debt repayments, and thus for lowering annual debt service, is long overdue. Whatever the precise plan, the point is that it should be developed by the World Bank, which was once at the forefront of new ideas for the developing world and should take up that mantle again.

Glasnost Can Make Life Easier for the KGB, Too

KINSDALE, Ireland — It was ironic but fitting that news of the huge Soviet intelligence operation in Canada broke shortly after Western leaders at the ecocomie summit in Toronto had welcomed Mikhail Gorbachev's policies of glasnost and perestroika as offering opportunities to "reduce mistrust and build confidence." The large-scale expulsion of Soviet diplomats from Canada for spying and the tit-for-tat Soviet response underlined an impor-tant reality. In this period of East-West bargaining and arms reduction, the game of intelligence gathering will be more important than ever. Trust between longtime interna-donal rivals does not blossom overnight. Despite the well-publicized arrangements for mutoal on-site inspections, each side will depend on clandestine reports and classified esti-mates of the other's honesty. If the trend toward denuclearization by East and West continues, one result will be renewed interest in the strength, composition and readiness of conventional forces. This would call for the in-

The surprise was that Canada had taken as tough a line as it had, given the unlikelihood that it would prevail.

Canadian officials acknowledged pri-one of Mr. Trudeau's realities: the need, in dealing with Moscow, to keep a wary eye on Washington.

In the spying case, the necessity was reinforced by the fact that the military contractor that the Russians attempt

Still, Mr. Gorbachev's policy of openness poses problems for the "boys from Dzerzhinsky Square."

The estimated 50,000-plus KGB agents responsible for domestic secu-rity already have their hands full with the rise in ethnic minority unrest. If glasnost makes life difficult for the KGB at home, it could make things easier for its overseas operators. The postsummit euphoria will allow them to exchange their black hats for white. The KGB agents among the personnel of Soviet em-bassies, consulates, international organizations, Aerollot, news agencies such as Tass, sports teams and peace groups certainly will profit from the oew environment. The desire of their Western cootacts to show sympathy and express support for the changes going on in the Soviet Union could provide them with easier access and facilitate their professional task.

A THENS—The bomb that killed U.S. Navy Captain William E. Nordeen near his home on June 28 opened a chilling oew chapter in the 13-year campaign of terror directed a chilling of the control of the cont against American military and intellince officials stadoned in Greece.

The assassination signaled a double failure by the Greek government: the police failure to break up the small band of anarchists who have now killed three American officials and wounded 100 U.S. personnel with bombs, and the political failure by Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou to start drying up the water of anti-American opinion in Greece in which these murderers swim.

Until now, Greece's police authorities have taken a relatively relaxed view toward domestic terrorism. That must change under the double impact of the vicious murder of Captain Nordeen, the U.S. defense attache, and the terrorist attack on Monday on a Greek cruise ship filled with tourists. ...

The Greek state is the ultimate target of outrages carried out on its territory. The low priority given to estabtory. The low priority given to establishing a modern police force that could fight terrorism is now exposed by these two assaults. "I don't doubt the desire of the police to do something about this," said a U.S. diplomat, trying to put things as favorably as possible for his host government. But I do doubt their competence."

Mr. Papandreou came to power in 1981 promising to modernize the state and heal the bitter divisions of Greek politics. The bloodshed of the past three weeks is one indication of how far short he has fallen of those goals.

His supporters argue that be aban-doned his once virulent criocisms of the United States after coming to power. He is maneuvering, they point out, to find a formula for a new agreement to keep U.S. bases here after the existing accord expires later this month.

But Mr. Papandreou has not put the stature of his office and his political power into defusing the strong tensions that surround America's role in Greek political life. He appears to hope that the issue will wither away if it is not talked about at all.

But the intimate Greek-U.S. connection, evidenced both in America's role in helping establish a democratic government here 40 years ago and in its wrongheaded support for the jun-ta that seized power in 1967, makes the United States a controversial part of Greece's sharply polarized politics. Positive leadership, not benign to-glect, is oeeded. The assassination of Captain Nordeen makes such an effort urgent. It has galvanized Greeks into asking why the small band of anarchists who killed him have been able to elade the police,_____ The bomb was larger and more sophisticated than any used before by the terrorists. Detonated by remote control, it turned the parked car in projectile that crumpled Captain Nordeen's car and immediately killed him.

An attack this complicated was thought to be beyond the competence of the homegrown anarchists, who have taken the name November 17, the day in 1973 on which police brutally suppressed a student uprising in Athens. The junta fell a year later. Greek and American officials who have studied the communiques of the November 17 group since it first surfaced in 1975 by admitting the assassination of Richard Welch, the CIA statioo chief, portray its bloody accomplishments as the work of a few deranged anarchists who have oo large political program and no links to international terror groups.

All the communiques issued after attacks — which have increased from an average of one a year to four in the last 12 months - have been written on the same typewriter.

The group seems motivated by the same kind of incoherent rage and lust for ideological violence that characterized the Weathermen in America, the Red Brigades in Italy and Actioo Directe in France. But November 17 has survived into the 1980s, perfecting its deadly expertise, while those organizations have been broken. November 17 is extremely small. It may consist of as few as two or three people, who oever try to recruit or get support from outside. That makes it impossible for the police to infiltrate it. But the extensive publicity that leftist Greek newspapers give their actions shows that there is a political climate here that has helped shape the actions of November 17.

It is this climate that Mr. Papandreou needs to do more to change, as well as shaking up the national law enforcement command to deal with the more urgent police problems.

A Wise American Proposal Can Help the Soviet Jews

By A. M. Rosenthal

N EW YORK — Very soon the Unit-ed States will make a simple but nofoundly important proposal to the had relatives abroad. From this grew a Soviet Union. Washington will officially legal fiction under which invitations from suddenly discovered Israeli relament to allow all Soviet Jews to emigrate tives would go to Soviet Jews.

the United States. That is far and away leading country of their hearts' important step toward living up to inter-

ON MY MIND

to leave their homelands if they seek z new life elsewhere.

For the government of Israel, it will bring disappointment and anger. The israelis, eager for talented Jewish manower, want Soviet Jews to go to Israel, by desire and persuasion if possible, by the legal pressures and fictions of Soviet emigration policy if necessary.

But for Americans who believe in giving Soviet Jews a chance to come to the United States, the strategy the State Department has in mind is a fulfillment of American principle.

The background is legal, political—and deeply emotional. It starts with the Soviet policy of refusing to let citizens leave at will. This is based on the theory that only traitors or maniacs would leave the Soviet Union, plus the quite reasonable fear that, given the chance, too many people would.

Under world pressure, the Soviet Union agreed to allow some Jews, bedeviled by anti-Semitism and hating communi m, to leave.

Moscow decided who, how many, when and what political or economic price the rest of the world had to pay for them. Soviet Jews became pawns in an intricate and ever-changing game of Soviet politics and blackmail.

Exit With Mixed Feelings

E NTRY visas are easier to obtain these days. I know I shall be back one day, drinking vodka from a teacup in Vartan's jazz club or standing ankle deep in cigarette butts and talking with tion that a Jew with Israeli citize Yuri about underground trade unions in the dreadful beer hall behind the Din-But the State Department with the State Depart amo stadium. But whatever Mikhail Gorbachev's success, I suspect it will be a long time before the tourists stop raising a cheer as the plane takes off. Personally, I feel torn between relief and sadness, like a man finally walking out on a difficult woman he still loves.

- Martin Walker, writing at the end of a four-year assignment as Moscow cor-respondent of The Guardian (London).

Moscow also insisted that sane Soviet. citizens would want to leave only if they in any country willing to accept them.

In time — usually long, long time —
For most Soviet Jews who want to some of them would get permission leave, that would mean going directly to from the Soviet government to leave, with an Israeli visa. In Israel, they would desire and a country willing to take them laws of Jewish return.

in as refusees from oppression.

But for most Soviet Jews, Israel is not the first choice. Arriving in Vienna, they would ignore their Israeli visas and opt instituted States, which considers them eligible to enter immediately as them eligible to enter immediately as refugees. So the Israelis say they will now demand that anybody who accepts an Israeli visa go there.

To guarantee that, the Israelis insist that the Soviet Jews go not to Vienna but to Bucharest, where the Communist government will make sure they go nowhere but as directed — to Israel.

When they arrive in Israel, and automatically get Israeli citizenship, Soviet Jews lose their refugee status. That means they cannot settle in the United States except through the regular immi-gration process, which takes years.

The whole thing has become a matter of dispute between the United States, which sees its principles at stake, and Israel, which sees important needs involved. Some American Jews support the Israelis in the name of solidarity.

Other American Jews believe it is wrong to insist that Soviet Jews be forced to go to Israel if they do not wish to do so - particularly wrong coming from American Jews who have no intention of living in Israel themselves.

The State Department has worked out a two-part plan. It has not yet been conveyed to the Russians or the Israelis. (It is not tied into the bureaucratic financial mess currently holding up visas at the Moscow Embassy.) First would come the request that Moscow allow Jews to go to the United States if they wished. Maybe the Kremlin is ready, it now allows Armenians to go to the United States.

If the Russians refuse, the State Department will ask that American immiration regulations be amended so that Soviet Jews who have to go to Israel will not lose their refugee status and could still immigrate to the United States. Israelis will be upset at the implica-tion that a Jew with Israeli citizenship

But the State Department will be right. It will be acting wisely by first placing the responsibility where it belongs, with the Soviet Union. If that fails, it will move to permit the refugees to come to the United States anyway.

Taken together, the two steps will com-bine political wisdom with a sense of justice, good news from the State Department for Americans who admire both.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Obstacles to Peace in the Gulf Are Coming Down

Thanks to the opinion article by Sir Anthony Parsons ("Gulf War: A Face-Saving UN Formula to Bring Iran Around," June 22) and the response from the fraci ambassador to London (Letters, July 7), we are now in a posi-tion to achieve something that has chided the United Nations.

Clearly, most of the people of Iran and Iraq wish to see an end to the war. Although the Iraqi government has ac-cepted Security Council Resolution 598, the Islamic leaders of Iran will continue pursuing the war (barring the total col-lapse of their country) until the Security Council recognizes publicly that there is also an Iranian point of view.

Iranian objections to Resolution 598 were due mainly to two factors; First, that it urged Iran to accept a cease-fire and to withdraw immediately to its bor-ders, something the Security Council had not asked of the Iraqis in 1980 when they were in Iranian territory; second, and perhaps more important, that it had failed even to contemplate appointing an impertial body to investigate the origins of the war. Article 6 of the resolution only couires the UN secretary-general to "explore" with the warring parties the possi-ble appointment of such a body.

Today, given Iraq's recent military ains, the matter of an Iranian withdrawal is no longer an issue. Further, it had been generally believed that Iraq would oppose the creation of an investigating body, fearing that it might be condemned as the aggressor. But the Iracis' ambassador in London states clearly that they would welcome the formation of such a body. This should be considered as a major breakthrough.

Thus, the Security Council can now initiate new efforts to establish an honorable cease-fire in the war. Should the Khomeini regime insist on fighting on after that point, then it will deserve even greater hostility from the international community — which hitherto has sided with the Iragis for all the wrong reasons.

MEHRDAD KHONSARL Chairman, Friends of Iran.

Airliner's Prestige at Stake

Before the dead were buried and before any technical facts were in, the pilot in the tragic crash of the A-320 Airbus in France was publicly vilified by officials who were a bit too anxious, for my taste, to rescue the prestige of the new aircraft.

have considerably more faith in the skill of the pilot than in the self-serving interests of the aircraft's manufactures or its backers. I for one do not intend to fly with any airline that buys the A-320 before it is proved reliable.

In Defense of Japan's Inns

The report by Kathy Jones and Clyde Haberman, "In Japan, Tourist Boot Camp" (June 17), took me by surprise. I have lived in Japan for years, and probably stayed in royokons, or inns, hundreds of times. Never in my experience have botel "mama-sans" "stormed" into rooms unannounced, not do they "kick" you out of bed for your morning meal. Attendants do not "burst" in and remove your meal if you have not finished.

When foreigners go to the communal bath, the Japanese do not rush out. The towels are oot slightly larger than post-age stamps, and if you know how to use one you don't have to put the yukata on while still sopping wet. TOMMY SNYDER

The article is in the same category as humor about Jews, Irishmen, Italians and others. This same kind of attitude goes into Japan-bashing, and American business suffers because of it. Hasn't Mr. Haberman beard of the saying "When in Rome, do as the Romans do"?

The Pundit Sounds Worried

William Safire is anxious to undermine the candidacy of a bright, stable and knowledgeable Michael Dukakis in favor of an out-to-hunch George Bush who has yet to tell us exactly what went on in times of crisis during his seven and a half years as vice president. It doesn't take a large amount of deducing to identify Mr. Safire's opinion column ("Taxes Are an Election Issue and Dukakis Is Dodging It," June 28) as political hogwash.

In Which the Correspondent Requires a Communist Pin

By Dennis Bloodworth

SINGAPORE — The Far East corre-spondent has to be a quick-change artist who can dress for all occasions almost simultaneously, for he may have to rush from an untidy riot to a minto gnash his teeth.

In the tropics, a safari suit and anklelength boots may cover a multitude of sins, and answer most challenges from a battle to a bun fight; for the rest, as long as he sends no more than one day's laundry to be washed at a time, the reporter will not run out of the basic necessities of life if be has to move suddenly.

dry underwear and socks, a short-sleeved nylon shirt worn open at the neck, one of those noncrease suits made of petrochem-ical waste, and suede boots. Unlike leather, sodden suede merely looks darker, not discolored, while perspiration remains in visible on a somber synthetic suit, and gives a saturated nylon shirt a new sheen. as if it had just been ironed.

In the pockets of the snit I would carry not only the paraphernalia of my trade but a comb and, above all, a clip-on bow tie. These accourrements could transform me in two minutes from a sweating hack just back from the wilds into an immaculate if slightly steaming dude fit to be passed through the most august portals. The whole vile get-up might then freeze stiff in the sub-zero air-conditioning within — but that would only add to the dignified effect. In 1955, just after Prince Norodom Sihanouk put his father on the Cambodian throne in his place in a back-tofront accession, I was invited to the coronation in Phnom Penh. When, in 1941, the prince had become hereditary monarch of the Khmers, whose tombs and temples at Angkor bore stony witness to the cruel but magnificent past of his forebears, the ancient kingdom of Cambodia had been a French "protectorate" for nearly 80 years.

agreed to withdraw. Cambodia was once more to be a sovereign state, and in consequence Prince Sihanouk now proposed to pass on to his parent the bit part of chessboard king, while he played the real ruler and shaped the destiny of his country as its autocratic prime m There were to be weeklong festivities,

But by 1954 the French had reluctantly and this time the prince was not in an impish mood. Or perhaps he was: Corre-spondents were required to wear dinner jackets to all functions, whatever the time of day. (These included the gala perfor-mance of the Royal Cambodian Ballet in which his daughter danced the lead.)

Perspiring journalists enjoyed a sly revenge, however, when Prince Siha-nouk invited the diplomatic corps in Cambodia to a function that required their excellencies from the doyen down to wear something they did not usually pack — tenue de travail: working clothes. For he had asked their countries to help him build a railway, and since their governments had declined to contribute any money, the ambassadors were to contribute their manual labor. The festivities over, I took off for Hanoi in my lavender suit in the company of two fellow journalists, the Australian Communist Wilfred Burchett and a convivial Pravda reporter named Yuri Gris-chenko. But when we put down in Vicaane on our way north, we were told that the plane would not be able to leave again until the following day.

After a grueling dinner consisting mainly of vodka offered by some hospitable Poles, my two colleagues suggested that we go to a nightclub. We set off in two of the gaudy trishaws they then affected in Laos. As I leaped down bightheartedly on arrival at the Hawaii Bar bowever, some small, even infinitesimal projection on the body of the cyclo treacherously engaged the seat of my dacron trousers. There was a genteel ripping sound, and a great flap of mate-rial fell away from my right buttock. One cannot trust Communists. My two companions treated the whole busin an exquisite joke. They could produce only one inadequate pin between them, yet insisted that we go into the Hawaii just the same. I managed to sidle through the door, hand on hip as if I were about to draw a gun, and sat down at the corner table with my back to the wall. We ordered drinks and were at once accosted by three taxi girls asking for the usual pineapple juice and a turn on the floor. My comrades rushed eagerly into the cha-cha with their escorts, leaving me with a rather large, wet-eyed young lady who wriggled about on her chair amid the fumes of some cloying scent.

"Pourquoi m'sieur o'aimer pas danser avec moi?" she asked in a timny little voice. "Peut-et' in sieur trouver pas j'suis jolie, eh?" The music stopped suddenly in the middle of this, her voice carried, people began to look and she began to sound perilously tearful. No, I protested, she was quite wrong; I loved to dance, I found her terribly jolic, and nothing would be nicer than to dance with her, only -1 made sure the solitary pin was in place — only I had pulled a muscle in my ... "Show me," she commanded with professional interest, leaning over to peer around my back. "Show me." And then - "But you've torn your trousers! Look! He's —torn —his —trousers! Ca, alors, par exemple! Didn't you realize?" And she threw out one of those hard, high laughs that can crack a bedside water jug.

Absolut Vodka Said to Set Spirits Spending Record

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

New York Times Service EW YORK - Absolut, Sweden's best-known entry into the U.S. vodice market, will have an advertising budget of about $18 million for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

That will give the No. 1-selling imported vodka in the United States the biggest advertising budget for a single brand of spirits in American history, according to Richard N. Costello, president and chief operating officer of TBWA Advertising, the agency that has been advertising Absolut in the United States since 1980.

Mr. Costello said the agency is on a hot streak. One reason for it he said is that members are becoming more familiar with the it, he said, is that people are becoming more familiar with the company, which was started in 1970 in Paris as Tragos, Bonnange, Wiesendanger, Ajroldi by four Young & Rubicam, Paris, run or business, Mr. Costello said, is the Absolut volka adverusing. Carillon Importers, whose brands included Absolut, Grand Marnier liqueur and Bombay Gin, had all its eggs in the Martin Landey Arlow basket in the late 1970's when that agency was acquired by Geers, Gross Advertising, already an agency for Brown-Forman Corp. Because of the conflict, Geers, Gross resigned from Carillon, which then turned to TBWA.

Young & Rubicam, the world's largest advertising agency, has acquired a minority interest in Team, a Lisbon firm, which is the largest independent ad agency in Portugal, billing about $14 million annually.

It will be named Team-Young & Rubicam, and although Y&R holds a minority position, it said it intended to become a majority shareholder. The two agencies already share a number of multi-national clients including Unisys, Trans World Airlines and Eastman Kodak.

Boston's Hill, Holliday, Connors, Cosmopulos has won the $50 million Nissan Infiniti account. The Infiniti's introduction is scheduled for next year. The account is the biggest ever won by the 20-year-old Boston agency. It will open a full-service Los Angeles office next year to serve Nissan Motor Corp. USA, which is based there.

Mr. Connors noted that the Infiniti will be one of the first huxury cars to be marketed in the United States by the Japanese. This is the fastest-growing facet of the automotive market.

The six advertising agencies that have been selected as finalists for the International Business Machines Corp. account, billing in the neighborhood of $150 million, are scheduled to receive identical creative assignments this week.

IBM promises to announce a winner by the end of Angust. Unlike many advertisers in agency searches, IBM is not using a

Some of the Madison Avenue smart money is guessing that IBM might choose more than one agency so that it would not be caught in a bind, as it was after the LOFE defection.

Yet the challenges he encountered in his rise from obscurity pale next to the resistance he oow faces in his seven-year battle to gain control of the Savoy Hotel PLC, perhaps the world's most prestigious collection of hotels.

The protagonists and the plot could almost have been taken from one of the Gilbert and Sullivan productions staged by Richand D'Oyly Carte, the young British impresario who built the Savoy in 1889 with the proceeds from such musicals as "H.M.S. Pinafore" and "The Pirates of Penzance.

The campaign for the Savoy group is heating up, as demon-strated by a dramatic shareholders' meeting in the elegant Lincoin Room of the Savoy on July 1, which was front-page news in Britain. But the ending is still in doubt and the fate of the blueblooded company may eventually be settled in the House of Lords, the highest court in Botain. The "siege of Savoy" is in part TOKYO—Japan's merchandise trade surplus fell 10.1 percent in June from a year earlier, to $5.93 billion, the Finance Ministry reported Tuesday. There was a 9.6 percent decline in the surplus with the United States.

year, the trade surplus declined 16 percent from the first half of 1987, to $33.66 billion, the ministry said in a preliminary report. Exports in the period rose 15.7 percent, to $125.43 billion, while imports increased 34.3 percent, to $91.77 bil-

Although the Juoe report marked the 14th consecutive monthly decline in Japan's mer-chandise account, it showed a significant slowdown from the 21 percent year-to-year drop in May. This chiefly reflected an unexpectedly large increase in Japanese exports.

On a customs-cleared basis, exorts rose 17 percent in June, to $22 billion, for the eighth consecu-tive double-digit increase. Exports of office equipment, semiconduc-tors and steel showed the largest gains, mainly because of price increases during the month.

$16.1 billion, over a year earlier. While the Finance Ministry report was less favorable than trade analysts had anticipated, most said it was too soon to conclude that readjustments in Japan's global trade imbalances would come to a halt in coming months. The data suggest that external demand remains more robust than we thought it would," said David Gerstenhaber, senior economist in Tokyo at Morgan Stanley Interna-tional Ltd.

On a seasonally adjusted basis, the surplus rose slightly for the first time in five months, to $5.2 billion in June from $5.14 billion the pre-

Slower progress in narrowing Japan's surplus with the United States reflected unexpectedly steady Japanese auto exports and rising U.S. industrial imports. Japan's imports from the United States grew 33.4 percent from a year earlier, to $3.11 billion.

The 9.6 percent reduction in Japan's overall surplus with the United States, to $3.63 billion, followed a 26 percent year-to-year drop in

By contrast, Japan's surplus with the European Community widened by 17.7 percent in June, to $1.81 billion, chiefly because European currencies have not depreciated against the yen to the extent the dollar has.

Hugh and his associates. When Trusthouse Forte made a takeover bid for the Savoy group in 1981, it emerged with 69 percent of the company's equity but just 45 percent of the voting rights because of a complex, two-tier share struc-ture of ordinary shares and more powerful B shares. In short, the Forte camp is left with effective ownership but without control. There are no Trusthouse Forte representatives on the Savoy board.

The crucial block of shares that accounts for 5.77 percent of the votes was issued in 1970, when the Savoy group made its one acquisi-tion outside Britain, purchasing the Emile Wolf for £720,000 (about $1.22 million at the current exchange rate) in cash and shares.

It included a chunk of B shares. But those shares ended up not with Mr. Wolf but in a Swiss-based "charity," La Fondation pour la Formation Hotelière, which turns out to be controlled by Sir Hugh, his relatives and associates, through a group of nominee firms

Forte has been able to garner some of the legal documents on the 1970 transaction, with a large cache coming from the late Mr. Wolf's lawyers, who apparently mistakeny handed them over to Trusthouse

Forte's legal advisers. The Forte claim is that the shares were never meant as payment for Mr. Wolf, that he was paid in cash only and that the 5.77 percent block was fraudulently issued to strengthen Sir Hugh's voting posi-tion. "We have extensive and co-ties he did so in the interests of the Sir Hugh's explanation was that in 1970 the 5 percent reporting re-quirement was not in effect and, later, he was "under the impression" that, as a Swiss institution, La Fondation pour la Formation Hotelière was not subject to the that's the end of it."

in getting the 5.77 percent voting shares declared void, its share of the votes will rise to 44.92 percent from 42 percent and the stake controlled by the board will drop to 47 percent from 50.5 percent, weakening the board's grip. And Lord Forte would move far Trusthouse Forte is suing to have this block of shares canceled. During the last few years, Trusthouse Forte has been able to small the shareholders woted 53.23 percent to 45.23 percent to 45.2 legal action. But more than the vote, the tone of the meeting and the comments of the shareholders spoke volumes about the depths of their loyalty to Savoy traditions and to the embodiment of those traditions, Sir Hugh.

One shareholder who rose to speak seemed to capture the mood of the meeting. "Whatever irregu-larities were committed, if Sir Hugh committed these irregulargent evidence of Sir Hugh Savoy," be declared to applause.

The Savoy's determination to resist is inspired also by the management team's disdain for the Fortes. Savoy executives refer to Lord Forte, for instance, as "the little chef," which is also the name of his company's chain of roadside fastfood restaurants.

But, in addition, the Savoy managers believe that Trusthouse Forte's big-company culture would undermine the personalized service and special character of the Savoy hotels. "The best things come in small packages," Mr. Shepard has said. "I don't think any big compaoy could run the Savoy properly. Another example of Savoy snob-bery, replied Mr. Forte. Already.

Polish Inflation Seen At 57% Year-End Rate

WARSAW — Poland's inflation rate will rise to 57 percent by the end of this year, Zdzisław Sadowski, the deputy prime minister, said ont. Tuesday. That would be more than double the 26 percent rate at the end of 1987. The inflation rate was 48 percent at the end of May.

"This is disadvantageous," said Mr. Sadowski.

"A proper price structure is crucial to an efficient economy, although we know price rises are painful and unpopular." The deputy prime minister is the architect of a government reform plan to boost Poland's faltering economy.

Mr. Sadowski told the Sejm. Poland's parliament

ment, in a review of the country's economic performance, that salaries would rise faster than prices. Pay packets will increase 62 percent this The government raised prices of many goods by 40 percent in February, in a bid to cod shortages. But the price increases triggered strikes and boosted inflation. Only Yugoslavia has a higher rate of inflation

Only Yugoslavia has a higher rate of inflation in Eastern Europe.

Poland e economy was hit hard by widespread strikes in the early 1980s as well as by the country's heavy indebtedness, and Mr. Sadowski, said the Polish economy was still 6 percent small. er today than in 1978.

Dollar Falls in Wait-and-See Market

NEW YORK - The dollar names trading against major cur-réacies, in anticipation of Friday's release of U.S. trade figures for

May, dealers said. May, dealers said.

Estimates of the size of the deficit for May and its likely impact on the market varied widely and trading was cautions. "I think people are being careful going into the mimber," said Hubert Pedroli, manager of the corporate foreign muchange desk at Credit Suisse, "and the sentiment is positive for but the sentiment is positive for the dollar." The dollar fell to 1.835g Deutsche marks at the close in New York from 1.8455 DM on Monday and to 132,375 yen from 133,375. It slipped to 1.5200 Swiss frames from Monday's 1.5340 and to 6.1895 French frames from 6,2090.

The pound rose to $1.6985 from 5,2095

In London, trading was moder-gic and technical, dealers said. "We see the dollar's basic trend as bullish, but we cannot move at the moment shead of the trade data," said Koichi Fukuda, Bank of Tokyo's customer dealer. With the dollar becalmed, market attention was on cross rates, in particular between the yen and the mark, dealers said. Bundesbank intervention was noted, as has been the recent pattern. the recent pattern.

The dollar eased to 1.8373 DM from 1.8465 at Monday's close. It fell slightly to 132.63 yen from 133.05. The decline against the yen ollowed a similar movement in firading Monday, when crossrate trading depressed the dollar.

Against the Swiss franc, the dollar eased to 1.5225 from Monday's 1,5350, while it dipped to 6,1935 French francs from 6,2115.

The pound was sidelined, dealers said, inching up to $1.6965 from $1.6890 but easing to 3.1155 DM from 3.1198. The British currency was unchanged at 75 on its trade-

a oumber larger than $11 billion would probably be taken negatively, though they noted that the dollar has stored up substantial strength since late May. A dealer in London said that even if the trade gap widens to $12 billion or $13 billion, it is unlikely that the dollar would fall sharply.

News that the Bundesbank had decided oot to raise the allocation rate at this week's securities-repurchase pact had little impact, as there was persistent speculation reported to have sold $34.6 million that the bank would be forced to raise interest rates sooner or later.

The announcement that Helmut Kohl, the West German Chancellor, would attend the Thursday meeting of the Bundesbank's coupcil - which sets the nation's monetary policy - attracted dealers' at-Most economists said they be-lieved the U.S. trade gap widened in May to about $11 billion from mucb impact on the market.

Bundesbank Maintains Key Interest Rate

FRANKFURT — The Bundesbank failed to confirm market expectations of a West German interest rate increase on Tuesday, leaving its key securities-repurchase interest rate unchanged at 3.75 percent. Speculation that the West German central bank might raise this rate led to tension in financial markets Monday. But Tuesday, the Bundesbank offered 28-day securities-repurchase agreements to com-mercial banks at the unchanged rate. The rate was raised on June 22 and July 2 by a quarter point each time, after being stable for more

Separately, a Buodesback spokesman annoppeed Tuesday that West Germany's Chancellor, Helmut Kohl, will attend Thursthe country's monetary policy.

The spokesman said in response to inquiries that Mr. Kohl would attend the meeting for an exchange of views on economic matters. The visit, the first by a chancellor since Monetary analysts said the talks would probably revolve around the presidency and set up a committee to study plans for a European Monetary Union, which will in-clude the Bundesbank president, Karl Otto Pohl.

While Mr. Kohl has never attended a Buodesbank couocil meeting before, Bonn colleagues, such as Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg, make periodic visits to discuss monetary matters.

Such visits have coincided with day's regular meeting of the changes in credit policy, but mone-Bundesbank's council, which sets tary analysts noted that the two do not necessarily go hand in hand, Bonn,

Inactive UN Fund to Aid 3d World Commodities

GENEVA — A dormant United Nations accord aimed at aiding Third World commodity producers has won enough support to take effect, the United Nations said Tuesday.

Graham Shanley, spokesman of the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNC-TAD)

TAD), said that ratification of the agreement on Monday by the Maldives, the Indian Ocean republic, meant the organization's Common Fund for Commodities could come into force. The fund, negotiated in 1980, was originally seen as a central pool of finance that could be used to buy commodities on world markets to keep prices stable. But officials have put more emphasis recently on using it to finance com-modities research and development.

GUMSHOE: Reflections in a Private Eye

By Josiah Thompson. 312 pages. $17.95. Little, Brown, 34 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. 02108.

Reviewed by John Gross

PRIVATE eyes in fiction often seem im-I plausibly introspective. They brood and philosophize; their tough hides conceal sensiove souls. But even the boldest covelist might hesitate before endowing an investigator with the intellectual credentials of the real-life private eye Josiah Thompson.

It was not until he was 40 years old, in 1976, that Thompson decided that a detective was what he wanted to be. At the time he was a professor of philosophy at Haverford College in Pennsylvania; he had previously taught at Yale, and three years earlier he had published a study of Kierkegaard.

Heading west, he persuaded a detective agency in San Francisco to take him on. A strike against a cable television company had turned violent, and he was given the job of keeping various union leaders under surveillance - which is what we find him doing in the opening pages of his memoir, "Gumshoe." It was dreary, poorly paid work, and he was thrown into it without any training. (Later in the book, we discover why.) It was potentially dangerous work, too: On his first day a bullet hole in the door of a building he was watching reminded him that he wasn't just play acting. Nevertheless he persisted. A couple of months later, when the second in command at the agency, David Fechheimer, left to set up his own business, Thompson joined him as an "apprentice operative." Subsequently he went into partnership with two of his colleagues, and then eventually, in 1979, he set up in business on his own account.

"Gumshoe" is primarily the story of some of the cases on which he has worked, but it also contains a certain amount about his life before he became a detective.

There are glimpses of his schooldays at Andover, his undergraduate years at Yale, his time in the Navy, his involvement in the antiwar movement during the 1960s. We learn about his marriage and his two children, and his growing sense, amid the civilized comfort of Haverford, that "the edge of experience lay

He likes the sense of "grittiness" and authenticity, the clear-cut successes and failures (so very different from what you get in teaching or writing), the acquisition of technical prowess, the neutral style — even though he recognizes that it is only a facade — of a Report of Investigation. One way and another, he has found his way back to "the edge of experience."

John Gross is on the staff of The New York Times.

Zico in the 1982 World Cup: A wonderful combination of spontaneous talent and electric reflexes.

4 Who Helped Shape Soccer

Giresse, Zico, Olsen and Passarella: Retiring Unforgot

LONDON — The game is bigger than the individ-ual, the sum supposedly greater than its parts. I cannot quarrel with the maxims: Soccer is a team sport. Yet, when several of its brighter lights go out at once, we feel the loss of those who imposed on the game a personality that was like a signature. And just retiring are four players whose styles embodied trends, not all of them lovable, in the modernization of a sport. Alain Giresse, France's tiny field general, was to my eye as close to the essence of his country's gotden era as Michel Platini. Of course, Platini, who retired a year ago, was the he transcended normality. But even genius oceds an organizer, and Giresse was ever that. At 5 feet 3½ inches (1.62 meters) he was dwarfed by every rival, and dominated by none, "Gigi is a little man who is always making the game bigger and better," commented Michel Hidalgo, the French team coach through three World Cups.

Giresse is, or was, something thoroughly old fash-joned, a classic inside forward who scored at times but, more important, created and served. Neat, precise, clairvoyant and with a left foot that could deliver the said: "I played always to enjoy myself."

For 20 years he did that in Bordeaux, Now, nearing 36 and after a superfluous last fling in Marseille, he will return to his small Bordeaux farm with his wife, Chantal, and two sons. Should the latter inherit their father's genes, it will not be long before someone tells them, as Giresse was told at 11, that there is no sporting future for boys of such stature. Au revoir, Alain. Better to have left too soon than go downhill before our critical eyes. Morten Olsen, often the least heralded but the true leader of Denmark's flourish through the 1980s, did step into public decline. Six weeks short of his 39th birthday, he answered his nation's call for last month's European Championship and became a visibly wea-ried athlete trying to lift a team past its peak.

Others - for example, Michael Laudrup, with whose father Olsen began his career - appeared just as worn. And, trying to spark life, Olsen made one thrilling, gliding surge out of defense up the right flank during his 97th international. But in doing so, he was exposed. He couldn't get back to defend quickly enough. Where once Olsen had time to spare, he now found a gap between seeing what to do and getting there to do it.

"I never tried to be famous," he reflected, "but I'm glad I'm not one of the 100,000 unknown Olsens in Denmark." He used fame circumspectly, campaigning for Armesty International because, he explained, boy who once got in his way. The man's appetite for the game, and for success, won soccer's ultimate prize. Concerns your family, your neighbor." His neighbors, and parents, have him back now. They waited for 16 have no World Cup victor's medal to prove what they years in Vordengbord, 65 miles (105 kilometers) north of Copenhagen, while Olsen traveled elegantly around perspective, because medals are not proof of men's Belgium and West Germany. Now it is his turn to run worth to the fabric of a game.

Whatever Zico retires to, it will not be anonymity. Artur Antunes Coimbra, as he was christened, came from a family of players raised on street and beach soccer. He was an adolescent bantam. His ability to stretch out for the ball, to stun it and spin it, to time his shots so as to impart startling ferocity from so small a physique, made rich industrialists in Brazil and, briefly, in Udinese of Italy, pay millions to set him up for life in apartment blocks. But Zico was too small, too delicate, 100 easily broken. Though a wonderful combination of spontaneous talent and electric reflexes, he never became the white Pele" he was built up to be. He scored more than 700 goals but represented just a flicker of Brazil's joyful play, an individual perplexed within a country that chose to coarsen its game in an attempt to make Europeans out of Latins.

Blinkered coaches and break-leg villains also blunted Zico. Claudio Coutinho, the late army captain who sought to put system to Brazil's national flair, made demands which, as Zico tater recognized, "put me in a tactical straight jacket." More blatant restraint was applied during the 1982 World Cup when Zico washounded by an Italian whose destructive qualities are legend. Still, compared to the thugs in Brazil, Claudio Gentile was merely discouraging. Three times in the opening 13 minutes of the 1982 game he fouled, he was booked and, teased by Zico's matador body swerve, tore the shirt from Zico's back.

That shirt is to this day the proud possession of Gianni Agnelli, Juventus's benefactor and the protec-tor of Gentile's reputation. "A marvelous talent, Zico," Agnelli observed. "But Gentile stopped him without brutality." Measured against what Zico's countrymen finally did to savage his skills - hacking his knees until surgery became habitual — Agnelli is right. Zico, by the harshest of judgments, failed.

No one would accuse Daniel Passarella of not fulfilling his potential. Certainly not to his face. Passarella, a man indomitable, a leader and a winner, captained Argentina to victory in the 1978 World Cup and became synonymous with the Argentine tust to celebrate something after years of military repression. From abject poverty he now returns a wealthy ranch and real estate owner, the fruits of also conquering Italy's club system.

"I've succeeded oot by being the world's most skillful player, simply one of the most determined," he says. "I've been totally dedicated to winning."

There speaks the ultimate pro. Alas, Passarella also left stud marks on the thigh of a compatriot, Diego Maradona, when they played for different Italian clubs, and scars on the mind of an unfortunate ball boy who once got in his way. The man's appetite for were to soccer. But I hope we remember them in

In Betting, If There's a Yen There's a Way

By Steven Crist

New York Times Service KYOTO, Japan - Baedeker, the trusted world-travel guide, offers some forbidding advice to a horseplayer visiting Japan: "Bet-ting is under state control and offers poor odds. In particular, the system is so complicated that it is virtually impossible for foreigners to participate."

To this foreigner, that sounded mighty like a dare, and the challenge was accepted. We were willing to dine on eel and jellyfish, and resigned to paying $8 for a cup of coffee, but absolutely determined to make and cash a het in the Land of the Rising Yen.

There are two types of thoroughbred horse racing in Japan: at small regional tracks, where second-class racing is conducted by local governments, and at the major tracks, where rich racing is conducted by the national government under the auspices of the Japan Racing Association. Wishing to taste the full variety of Japanese culture, we the full variety or Japanese thought it was only right to try both types.

The first stop was Oi — rhymes with "snowy" — a local-government track eight miles (13 kilometers) south of Tokyo. The horses running here are a notch below the very best, but it has the only night racing in town. Our Japanese hosts helpfully provided the local racing sheets. There are five competing versions, all, of course, printed only in Japa"best bet."

Baseball's 59th All-Star Game: More a Changing of the Guard

CINCINNATI - Major league baseball's 59th All-Star Game, to be played Tuesday night, rain permitting, was to be not so much a showcase of talent as a changing of the guard, a hello to Andres Galarraga and Will Clark and a goodbye to Jim Rice and Mike Schmidt.

It would see 30 of the 56 players making their first all-star appearances, with 14 having yet to cele-brate their 26th birthday. It would see so many newcomers that the slick, $5 official programs likely would be dog-eared by the time the last pinch hitter was sent up in the ninth inning.
"That's the way it's supposed to be, isn't it?" the National League's manager, Whitey Herzog of St. Louis, said Monday. "It's 1988, isn't it? Who can predict it? I know the guys that are on the team are having good years. But this spring, who would've guessed that Eric Davis, Dale Murphy, Tony Gwynn and Tim Raines wouldn't be here?" None of them were here. Instead, Kurt Stillwell was. And Harold Reynolds, Doug Jones, Tim Laud-ner, Terry Steinbach and Danny

The players were seeking an injunction that would free them from their present teams because there was no collective bargaining agreement between the NFL owners and the players' union when the players'

Doty said that while there was a likelihood the players could prevail in a trial and that not granting an injunction might cause some players to face irreparable harm, the greater damage was the harm that would befall the league and specifically its competitive balance. # Hot Days in Car City

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — The thermom-Neter at the kitchen window, which is in shade, read 98 degrees (about 37 degrees Centigrade) at lunchtime, so we drove over to the shooping center to eat, rather than

Everybody should walk it, of heart, arteries, synapses and what have you, and a little heat, as somebody has doubtless observed, never killed anybody. Look at Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego. Thai's Daniel 3, for the benefit of all who wasted youth staring at "The Mickey Mouse Club" instead of reading the Bible. Look it up, Mouseke-teers; it's got a beat that beats rap-

we used the car to get to lunch. Didn't feel the least hit rotten about driving instead of walking. Nobody else was out there walking. Why should we be the only people in town humoring our synapses on a day like this, we asked each other.

It's hard enough walking to the shopping center even when Nebuchadnezzar isn't heating the fiery furnace seven times more than it is wont to be heated. There are no sidewalks for part of the way. In Car City, where we live, they deliberately leave the sidewalks off so walkers have to use the street, thus giving the drivers something to aim at in the otherwise boring stretches between shopping centers.

Do not be literal-minded, Car City is not a real name. It is merely a metaphor to lighten a hot, heavy story with a little poetry, like the metaphorical sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer and all kinds of music to whose strains Nebuchadnezzar commanded everybody to fall down and worship the image of gold.

In Nehuchadnezzar's Babylon they worshiped idols of gold; in Car City it is the multiwheeled, fossil-fuel-propelled idol that is top of the pole, worshipwise.

So we drove to the shopping center, hating ourselves for what we were doing to our synapses; hating the burning, fiery furnace because after days of fiery hurning, it had worn out its welcome yet refused to get up and go home; hating ourselves some more for what we were about to do to our bodies.

As we drove to eat the unspeak-able shopping-center food, each of us was thinking. "How can I punish my unusterably marvelous Self by subjecting its adorable body so nutritionally disgusting sulfiles and other dreadful fast edibles I'm always railing against?"

At least we were not eating at Vast Eyesore Mall with its huncourse. Walking is great for the dreds of instant-thawed-chemical restaurants all owned by the infa-mous Retch 'n' Like It feedingtrough cartel. We preferred the Forested Acres Center, named for the thousand acres of beautiful forest cui down, then hulldozed flat, then sealed under layers of asphalt in order to make orgiastic commerce possible at last in Car City.

When we parked the car on Forested Acres, the temperature was 145 degrees. We stepped out of the car anyhow and stood on the triumph in asphalt and thought of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego in the province of Bahylon, where to produce a heat comparable to Car City's you had to heat a furnace seven times hotter than it was won1 to be heated.

Many questions raced through our minds. For example, why do weather officials always take the official temperature reading at shady kitchen windows instead of on the sun-drenched square mileages of asphalt covering America's murdered forests that have become the centers of national life?

Why do the architects of our Forested Acres Centers and Vast Eyesore Malls never pause in their woodland slaughters long enough to say, "If we leave a dozen of these fine old shade trees standing. I'll bet they'll keep enough sun off this asphalt to hold the temperature under 120 at the height of the drought

This led to other questions. For instance, why do Americans hate lawyers so much when architects are doing far more than lawyers can to make the country unlivable?

Another for instance: You can make a good case that a high percentage of lawyers are doing worthwhile service to the country, but who can name three architects who, if hanged, would be a loss to the public?

They are our summer Nebuchadnezzars, heating the graveyards they make seven times hotter than a furnace need be.

Eric Rohmer at Work: Tea for Two

New York Times Service PARIS — Each year, from I among the freshest young faces in French theaters and acting schools, a chosen few are invited to what may be the most daunting and bewildering audition of their lives: tea with Eric Rohmer.

"Over tea we spoke of everything, music, painting, architec-ture, society, love," recalls Emmanuelle Chaulet, a young French actress that Rohmer spotted at a theater class. "During six months or a year, I saw him regularly and he never said a word about any film project. But he taped all our conversations, and I knew that was his technique in making movies, so I played the

The result, after two years of playing this subtle, complex game, was Chaulet's first major film role, the lead in Rohmer's comedy of young love, "L'Ami de Mon Amie," which as "Boyfriends and Girlfriends," opens in New York on Friday.

But as Chaulet learned, tea with Rohmer is more than an audition; it is a twisting passageway into Rohmer's private world, into what may be cinema's most unusual creative process.

The backdrop to Rohmer's work is well known. Along with François Truffaut, Jean-Luc Godard and Clande Chabrol, Rohmer emerged in the 1950s as one of the New Wave directors, partisans of the highly personal film, embodying the particular artistic sensibilities of their individual auteurs. But while the others split off in various directions, Rohmer produced a surprisingly coherent body of work, which he separates into two distinct series, Moral Tales, and Comedies and Proverbs.

Rohmer resolutely keeps the keys to his own creative process secret. To his purist spirit, artists should remain invisible, and Rohmer prefers to remain hidden behind such acclaimed films as "Claire's Knee," "My Night at Maud's," "Summer" and "Full Moon in Paris."

But now it is teatime on a glorious summer afternoon in Paris, and here comes the master to make an exception to his rule. 'My personal life will remain shadow." Rohmer warns. "I will speak of my work, but that is

At 67, Rohmer on first encounter looks every inch the unbending iconoclast. In his great bust of a bead, the cheeks have the hollow look of an ascetic, and his sensitive blue eyes, faced with an intruder, are hooded and furtive.

But once installed in his cozy little office, his preferred site for afternoon tea, Rohmer starts to let down his guard. The presence of a tape recorder calms him - it is a precious tool of his own private craft - and Rohmer's eyes finally settle into the gentle, patient blue of a forgiving grandfa-

Like so many of his films, "L'Ami de Mon Amie," is another patient exploration of Rohmer the naturalist's preferred species: young French women. Young French women freshly emerged from their girlish cocoons, often reacting according to the season, the weather and the locale, but always as light and fluttering and capricious and fragile as butterflies on the wing. "What Rohmer is after is the magical quality of spontancity. There is a freshness about his films that you just don't find elsewhere," Chaulet said. "It is the art of the minimal. His sets are minimal. His way of shooting is minimal. His crew is minimal. The idea is to arrive at a certain purity of expression.

In other films, Rohmer has sought spontaneity by experimenting with only half-written scripts. "L'Ami de Mon Amie" represents a return to a formal, fully written script. But the process remains oure Rohmer.

The story, as it took shape, portrayed the arrival in the new city of Cergy-Pontoise of a sensitive young woman named Blanche. portrayed by Chaulet, who is befriended by a more experienced and outgoing young woman named Lea (Sophie Renoir). Through intertwined romances, the story ends hy justifying Rohmer's French title, which translates as the boyfriend of my girlfriend

Chaulet: "He knows very well how to observe young people, and he knows very well how to observe women. He likes to sur-round himself with women, and he understands very well a certain part of femimine psychology, the language of love, the approach of an amorous adventure, all the games of love ..."

Rohmer: "While I was making another movie, I wrote up my subject . I adapted my subject to the character of my two actresses, Sophie Renoir and Emmanuelle Chaulet. But the text was was wholly written hy
